1. The purpose of this document is to provide information regarding the status of the patent application for the invention of a new and improved method of determining the concentration of a substance in a sample. The invention is described in detail in the accompanying patent application, which is hereby incorporated by reference into this document.

2. The invention is a method of determining the concentration of a substance in a sample by measuring the absorbance of the sample at a specific wavelength. The method involves the use of a spectrophotometer to measure the absorbance of the sample at a wavelength of 254 nm. The absorbance is then compared to a standard curve to determine the concentration of the substance in the sample.

3. The invention is a significant improvement over the prior art, which required the use of complex chemical reactions to determine the concentration of a substance in a sample. The invention is simple, accurate, and easy to use, and it provides a rapid and reliable method of determining the concentration of a substance in a sample.

4. The invention is described in detail in the accompanying patent application, which is hereby incorporated by reference into this document. The patent application is filed with the United States Patent and Trademark Office, and it is expected that the invention will be granted a patent in the near future.

5. The invention is a valuable tool for the determination of the concentration of a substance in a sample, and it is expected that it will be widely used in the future. The invention is a significant contribution to the field of analytical chemistry, and it is a testament to the ingenuity and creativity of the inventors.
